1. Write a command to display all files and directories, including hidden files, in long-list format.
2. Write a command to list directory contents and display only the first five lines.
3. Write a command to display the contents of file1.txt and file2.txt together.
4. Write a command to display the contents of file1.txt and then count the number of lines.
5. Write a command to display the current directory and then count the number of characters in its path.
6. A user wants to display all files, including hidden files, and count the total number of listed lines. Write the command.
7. Suppose file1.txt contains several lines of text. Write a command to display its contents and count the total number of words.
8. A student has created three files: a.txt, b.txt, and c.txt. Write a pipeline command to display their combined contents and count the total number of lines.
9. A directory contains multiple files. Write a command to list all files in long format and count the total number of lines displayed.
10. A user wants to display the contents of report.txt and count the number of characters.
11. Write a shell command to display all files and directories in the current directory in reverse alphabetical order.
12. Write a shell command to display the contents of student.txt in alphabetical order.
13. Write a shell command to display only the lines containing the word "Computer" from course.txt.
14. Write a shell command to display the first 5 lines of data.txt and sort them alphabetically.
15. Write a shell command to display the last 5 lines of student.txt and save the result in last.txt.
16. Write a shell command to display all lines containing the word "Linux" from os.txt and save the matching lines in linux.txt.
17. Write a shell command to display the first 10 lines of marks.txt in reverse alphabetical order.
18. Write a shell command to display the last 10 lines of records.txt in alphabetical order.
19. Write a shell command to display the lines containing the word "Java" from programming.txt and number the resulting lines.
20. Write a shell command to display the first 5 lines of employee.txt and count the number of lines displayed.
21. Write a shell command to extract the first column from employee.txt using a comma as the delimiter and sort the extracted names alphabetically.
22. Write a shell command to display the lines containing the word "Operating" from lecture.txt and count the number of matching lines.
23. Write a shell command to extract the second column from student.txt using a comma as the delimiter and save the result in marks.txt.

24. Write a shell command to display the first 8 lines of result.txt, number those lines, and save the output in numbered.txt
25. Write a shell command to search for the word "Science" in department.txt, sort the matching lines alphabetically, and display the result.
26. Write a shell command to extract the first four characters from each line of names.txt and sort the results.
27. Write a shell command to display the lines containing the word "Unix" from notes.txt and number the matching lines.
28. Write a shell command to extract the first column from student.txt, sort the names, and save the result in sorted_names.txt.
29. Write a shell command to display the last 8 lines of computer.txt, number them, and save the output in output.txt.
30. Write a shell command to search for the word "Programming" in book.txt, display only the matching lines, and sort them in reverse alphabetical order.